

DISCLAIMER

Sovereign BBQs will not be held liable for any consequential loss or injury caused by the negligence of the purchaser or other third party. This includes but is not limited to: misuse; abuse; neglect; accidental damage; liquid spillage; alterations or servicing by unqualified/unauthorised persons and other third parties.

As a condition of use, Sovereign BBQs requires all parties who intend using the BBQ to read the official "Installation and Operating Instructions" in its entirety, prior to use (as enclosed with your new BBQ, or available from the manufacturer in the event that they have been misplaced).

Sovereign BBQs advises that it is not appropriate to have persons operating your BBQ who are not familiar with its operational procedure (the correct operational procedure is outlined in the "Installation and Operating Instructions").

Sovereign BBQs further advises that children should be supervised at all times whilst in the vicinity of your BBQ (your BBQ will become hot when cooking), and at no time operate the BBQ without the presence of a competent adult familiar with the correct operational procedure of your Sovereign BBQ.

While all Sovereign BBQs are designed to withstand the harsh conditions of the outdoor environment, protective measures can be put in place to prevent reasonable wear and tear. Sovereign BBQs advises that the purchaser read and adhere to the "cleaning and maintenance" section of the enclosed "Installation and Operating Instructions", and ensure that all mechanical parts of the BBQ are confirmed to be operating normally prior to using your BBQ on each and every occasion. Should you at any stage be concerned, please contact a qualified gas technician immediately.

This warranty and disclosure does not limit a consumers right of action under the Trade Practices Act (CTH) 1974 or any other Australian consumer legislation.
